FORESTS: WHAT FUTURE DO WE WANT?

A world rich with healthy, vibrant forests, pulsing with life.

Many forests are ancient, living monuments to the Earth's long history. Others are still young, growing quickly over once-degraded land, holding deserts at bay. Pure rivers run through them. A proportion of the world's forests are managed sustainably and with care, for timber, food, medicines, as sources of livelihoods and as places to relax, or valued for their rich cultural and spiritual associations. Throughout the world, secure and healthy forests have helped stabilize the climate. Responsibly managed plantations, supplying fibre for materials and energy and delivering important ecosystem services, share the landscape with wild forests, towns, productive farms, and nature reserves. Maintaining forests is a cornerstone of national and international policies.

Forests are central and essential to life, supporting wild species and providing countless goods and vital ecosystem services, like clean water and carbon storage. Their future is in our hands.

Climate change: The slow variations of climatic characteristics over time at a given place. Usually refers to the change of climate attributed directly or indirectly to human activity that alters the composition of the global atmosphere and that is, in addition to natural climate variability, observed over comparable

Or consider the reverse.

Most of the Amazon, Asia-Pacific, and Congo forests are a distant memory, and the crops that replaced them have been destroyed by droughts and fires. The world's poorest billions struggle for food and water, rich and poor alike are battered by extreme weather. Deserts encroach on farmland and towns. Lists of extinct species grow longer by the day. Energy crises cripple industry and isolate communities. Huge swathes of boreal forest have died, further accelerating climate change. Wars over natural resources are affecting half the nations on the planet.
