Clustered microsatellite markers for evaluating the genetic diversity of the indigenous goat population in the Americas and its genetic association with SCS. The present study examined the genetic diversity and population structure of the Colombian indigenous goat using a panel of 11 microsatellite markers and compared their usefulness with those of Indian and Saanen populations. The genotypic diversity in the Colombian indigenous goat was lower than that of Indian and Saanen. The largest average allelic number was found for Marker GT4 (8.73) and the lowest for Marker GT6 (4.73). A high level of genetic differentiation was observed among the Colombian goat populations. A high similarity between indigenous goat and Indian breeds was observed, with the highest values being in the case of Jamaica x Timor Island crossbred goats. According to the canonical analysis, the present study identified two main groups, one composed of Colombian goats, Indian goats, an Ecuadorian indigenous goat breed, and the crossbred breeds, and the other composed of the Saanen goat. The grouped samples were consistent with the appearance of the dendrogram. Yoga therapist says senior day 'the best' As the City of Hope in Duarte hosts its seventh annual Senior Day, Yoga at the City of Hope opened its doors to senior citizens who want to participate. In the Yoga at the City of Hope class, participants do yoga and breathe together, and participants are encouraged to get up and go. Ahtiaq Sarwar is the owner and yoga teacher at Yoga at the City of Hope. "Since it's our day, we're just going to do our special practices," Sarwar said. According to Sarwar, many seniors do yoga at the City of Hope for their health, but this is the first time the class is open to all residents. "It's the best senior day ever," said Carol Daly, one of the
